

Barn quilt made by local DUP to be featured in the "Barn Again" exhibit.

The Smithsonian Comes To Our Mountain Valley

Heber Valley has been chosen to host a traveling exhibit from the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, DC. Steven Olsen, local committee chair for the exhibit, has been working with Brian Crockett of the Utah Humanities Council for two years to realize this "first" for our mountain valley. The exhibit and associated activities will be open to the public during May and June 1998.

The exhibit entitled "Barn Again: Celebrating an American Icon," will remind us of the vital contribution barns have made to the rural landscape and agricultural way of life of America. In addition to photographs from the Smithsonian's vast collections, the exhibit will focus on local barns of distinction.

Between now and next May, the exhibit committee will be seeking evidence of the legacy of barns of Wasatch County. If you have photographs, journals, letters, descriptions, sketches, tools, equipment, or other visual or documentary records of local barns, contact any committee member: Moroni Besendorfer, Florine Whiting, Fern Spanos, Gloria Montgomery, Raymond Green, Laurie Turnblom, Andrea Robinson, or Lucille Tuttle. For more information about this exhibit and its associated activities and about how you can help make this opportunity a grand success, visit the Chamber of Commerce booth at the middle school during the Fair Days. For more information, contact Steve Olsen, 654-3523.
